The use of SILKS, or racing colors, originated over 200 years ago in the cradle of horse racing - Newmarket, England. There, the 19 owners of the Jockey Club came to “the resolution and agreement of having their colors annexed to the name of their respective riders.”

At first, racing silks were simply solid-color shirts. But the passing years have seen designs blossom into a dazzling array of polka dots, stars, hearts, stripes, checks and diamonds in mixed colors.

These brightly colored garments are an owner’s pride, and contribute greatly to the colorful Pageantry of horse racing.

Adorning the entrances and Paddock here at Remington Park, the jockey statues represent the owner’s silks of the past Oklahoma Derby Winners.
